Sandy MacFarlane

I felt accustomed to metal working from my early years, watching my uncle in the blacksmith shop on the Manitoulin farm, or my dad, always fixing something in his workshop. But it was many years later that I first explored making metal jewellery while living in Europe. I was intrigued by the exceptional designs and quality of European goldsmiths. This appreciation of traditional goldsmith skills is complimented by my deep admiration of our natural world and the artistry found there. Life experiences and our natural world are continuous sources of inspiration that influence my designs.

I also enjoy teaching jewellery classes and workshops at the Art School of Peterborough, and giving students the opportunity to learn traditional goldsmith skills in a time-honoured way. I work from my home studio and exhibit at select shows and outlets.
